Seek peace, and pursue it.

—Psalm 34:14

Every age has needed the reminder —“seek peace, and pursue it,” but at no time in history has the message been so urgent. The responsibility for securing peace is one which we, as graduates, cannot evade. We have, to guide us, the successes and failures of organizations and individuals who have worked in the past to bring peace to the world.

It is to these people who have given their time, talents and, in many cases, their lives to the cause of World Peace that we dedicate this twenty-fourth edition of the Tricolor. Dag Hammarskjold, Tom Dooley, Ralph Bunche, Albert Schweitzer . . . names well known, reputations justly won, lives surrendered to peace, memories in history. These are a few of the many who have sacrificed themselves to our future happiness in a nation at peace with all others. We are thankful for the steps taken by these men in their negotiations and for the example they have set for us to follow.

Let us realize our responsibility to these men, to the world, to our country, to our parents, and to ourselves as we leave this, our training ground, to find the place awaiting us. Let us “seek peace, and pursue it.”

— THE PRESIDENT'S —

MESSAGE

DOUG BELL
President

With the close of another school year we can reminisce upon our successes with pride and our disappointments with woe. From dawn till dusk, five days a week, Strathcona has been inhabited by energetic students. There have been team practices in the early morning and the late afternoons; houseleague and club activities during the noon-hours and enrichment programs in the evenings. Scona students of 1961-1962 have done an admirable job in all phases of school life: athletically, scholastically and socially.

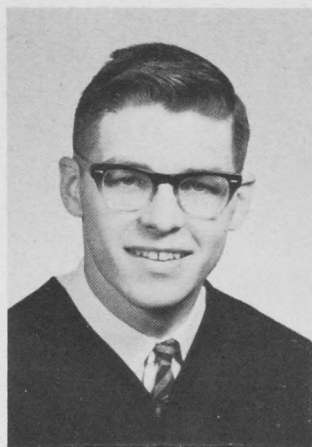

Serving as president of your Students' Union has been quite an experience. It has had its frustrations, but the wonderful co-operation of my associates on the executive, on the council and on the activities board made the duties of president most enjoyable.

The patient assistance of Mr. Innes, Mr. McNaught and especially Mr. Houglund helping us through our moments of uncertainty was greatly appreciated by all. Looking to the most important thing, the future, I wish the best of luck to the Graduating Class wherever your next endeavors take you and to the undergraduates I challenge you to continue and improve upon our past achievements.

VALEDICTORY

As presented to the Graduating Class in the evening of Friday, May 25, 1962.

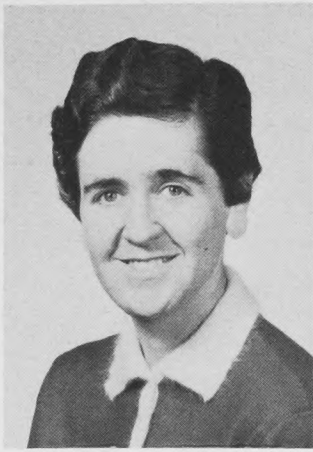

We of the graduating class can scarcely believe that tonight marks the official end of our years in high school. Yet the occasion is here; this is indeed our graduation; and tonight most of us are saying our formal "good-bye" to Scona. Through its varied courses and many extra-curricular activities, Scona has given each of us enriching experiences. When we think back on our years at this school, many memories come crowding to our minds—the hectic noon-hour rush in the cafeteria, noisy study halls, loud cheering at school football games and track-meets, befuddling chemistry labs, and hilarious election campaigns. Although this graduating class is so large that we are not all even mere acquaintances, we have these memories to share. Any temporary disillusionment or frustration in high school has been well outbalanced by many good times and a significant gain in maturity.

No one can predict where the members of this class will be ten years from now. Certainly we will be represented at all levels of Canadian society. Some of us will be teachers; some mechanics; some office workers; others doctors, housewives, or even politicians. Canada needs good citizens in all these positions. Thus each of us will make his own contribution to the future if he does his job thoroughly and participates in the useful activities of his community.

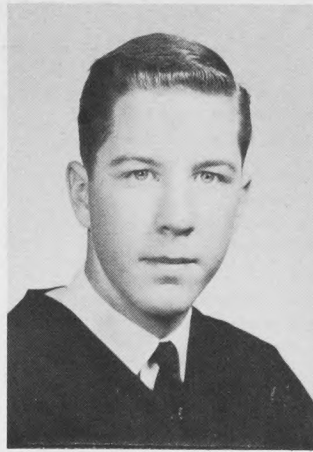

In our rich society it is especially easy to become preoccupied with the superficial values of wealth and physical appearance, to allow the Cadillacs and bridge parties of suburbia to become the focal point of our lives. We must not forget that life should have a purpose beyond these mundane matters. Even though this purpose may not be the same for each one of us, possessing it is an absolute necessity. Certainly living becomes very simple when we do not take the trouble to resolve our doubts concerning religion and philosophy, when we refuse to think about the Cold War and the starving millions, when we live as mere robots operated by conventional society. We cannot allow our affluence to make us lethargic. Today's world does not invite us to try our wings, it challenges us. We shall attempt to answer that challenge.

HISTORY OF CLASS '62

DICK McCLURE
Class Historian

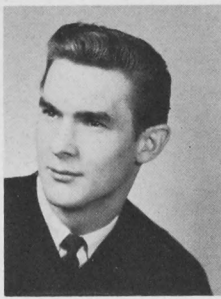

The event we have long been waiting for has finally arrived—our graduation. We now are the ones who can look back and fondly recollect those many events which make up our class history.

The first week of introduction to Scona was indeed one to remember. Beanies were placed on our heads as we obtained the proud title of "frosh." Right away we were introduced to the nineteen clubs and various Houseleague activities that Scona has to offer, making that first week one we really enjoyed. As frosh week drew to a close, the real work of high school began. There were text books to be bought, homework to struggle with, and exams to write. We attended our first Scona social, the Frosh Dance and discovered that high school wasn't all work. As that first year progressed, many activities were held which attracted many students. The Drama Club that year produced two excellent plays, "A Christmas Carol," and "Macbeth," both great successes. In the field of sports, the swim team and the badminton team both brought honor to the school by capturing inter-school championships which provided one of our proudest moments.

Our return in the second year again proved to be a great success for this class. Once again the swim team from Strathcona swam to regain the championships and, with the basketball and track team finalists, heaped more honor on Scona's name. Throughout the year we were well entertained again by the Drama Club and their production of the delightful comedy, "Our Hearts were Young and Gay." Academically we proved ourselves worthy to be students of Strathcona in that twenty-seven of our graduates here tonight obtained academic awards. That was truly a year to remember.

Now here we are in the closing days of our last year at Strathcona Composite High School. This, perhaps, has been the most memorable year, possibly because we were the respected senior class. For the fifth consecutive year, our talented swim team won the Grand Aggregate Trophy proving once and for all that they were the undisputed champions. The school badminton team swept top honors from Victoria Composite this year, winning the championship for the third time in four years. Culturally, the Scona Drama Society presented three plays in their new theatre-in-the-round, the first school to have such a stage in this city.

Our three years as High School students will soon be history. We have struggled through these three years of our lives with the hopes of obtaining success and recognition for both our school and ourselves, by athletic and academic feats. Tonight there are fifteen students in particular whom we can be proud of. These fifteen are eligible for major academic awards, a very notable achievement in the hardest school year of our lives. In about one month, each one of us will be leaving this school for the last time. We shall be meeting new people, doing new things, and visiting new places, but whatever the future, memories of Scona Comp. will remain with us forever.

KANG NAM KOO

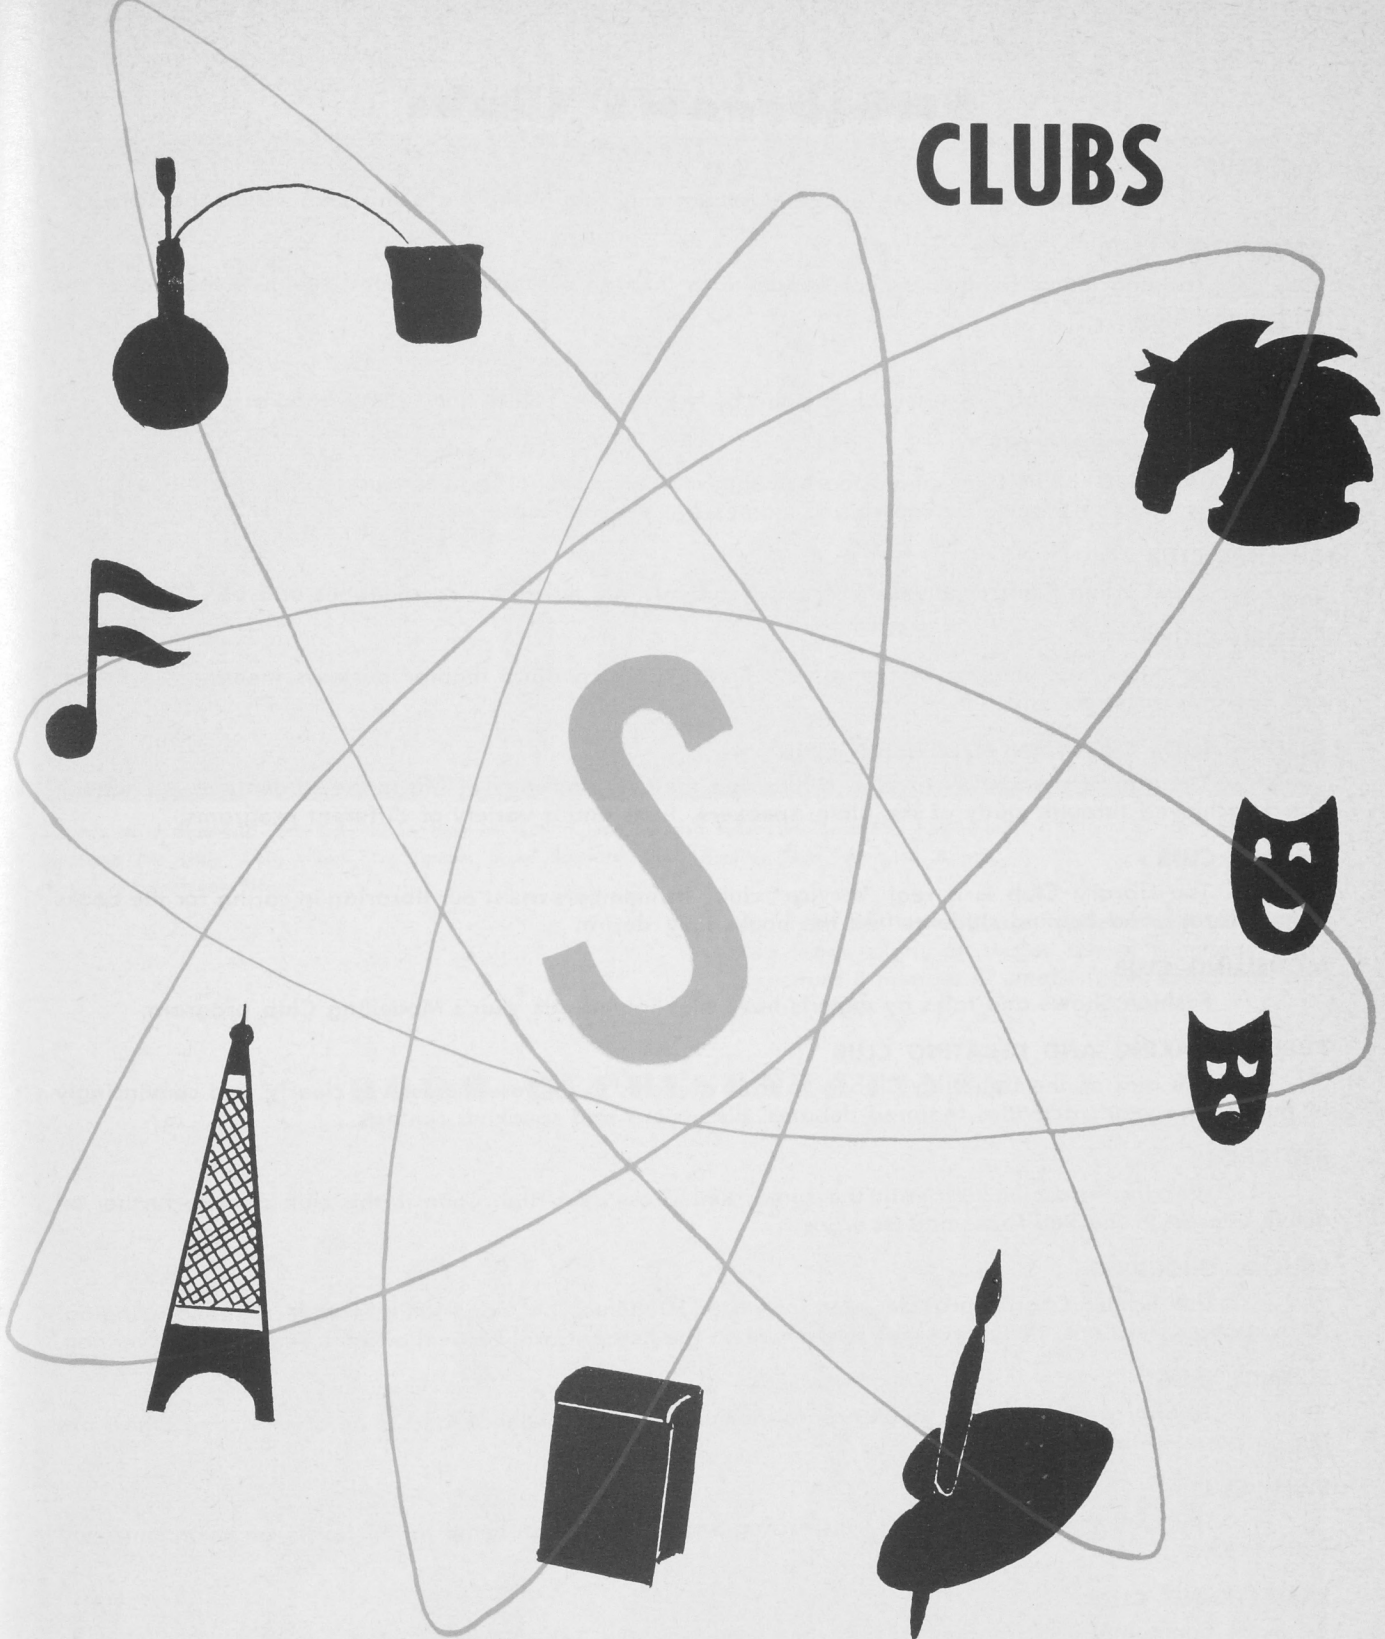

Kang Nam Koo, an orphan of Japanese descent, is Strathcona Composite High School's foster child. Adopted the year Scona was built, he attends a Korean school under our sponsorship. We send him fifteen dollars each month, or one hundred and eighty dollars yearly for his education and support. Part of this sum is made up of contributions by Scona students.

In his monthly letters, Kang Nam Koo tells of his daily life, his resolutions to work harder, and his plans for the future. Annabelle Sartore, Marg Putman, and Terry Delaney correspond with him, writing of matters likely to interest him. Sports, school activities and various holiday customs figure largely in the letters. At sixteen, Kang Nam Koo is an intelligent teen-ager who deserves all the aid we can give him.

FROSH WELCOME WEEK

Once again, there was no persecution of the frosh. Instead, these newcomers were welcomed. Beanies were provided for the Grade Tens and Club Orientation Day acquainted them with the school activities. At the annual sock dance, a frosh court, consisting of an impartial jury and judge, tried frosh who were, naturally, found guilty.

SADIE HAWKINS DANCE

Gals dragged their favorite fellows into a "Dogpatch Scene" amidst hundreds of hard-time costumes. Bill Lee was commentator. Mr. and Mrs. Briggs received an award for the best dressed couple at the dance.

SWEETHEART OF THE SWIRL

Sweetheart: Penny Mark

Attendants: Left, Enid Jones; right, Sharon Carlson

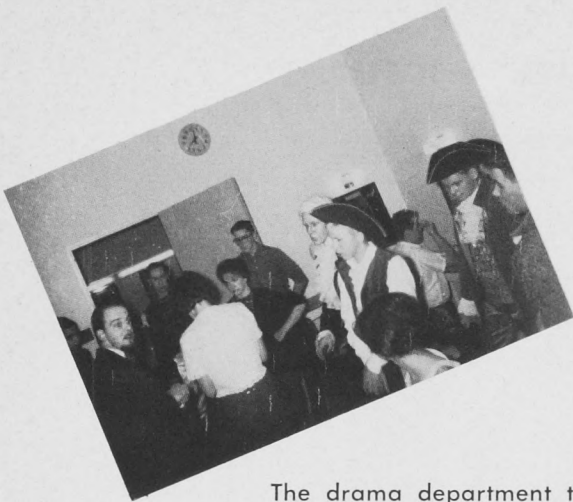

Belles and beaus entered the beautifully decorated gym in a swirl of lovely gowns. Cookies following the Valentine theme were provided at each of the separate tables. The highlight of the evening was when Mr. Innes crowned Miss Penny Mark as Miss Sweetheart of the Swirl. Other contestants were Enid Jones and Sharon Carlson. A good time was had by all.

GRADUATION EXERCISES AND DANCE

Receiving their diplomas on May 25, at the Graduation exercises were 360 graduates. The Class Historian was Dick McClure, and the Valedictory Address was given by Trudy Govier. The invocation was given by Reverend G. M. Edwards, and the guest speaker, Dean Elson, addressed the graduating class.

The Jubilee Auditorium was the scene of the banquet and dance on May 26. The toast to the graduating class was given by Barb Krause, and Joyce Huculak replied. Mr. D. R. Innes replied to the toast to the school given by Barb Ellis. Larry Kincade toasted the parents and Dr. Bell replied.

Music for the dance which followed the banquet was provided by Len Whiteley's orchestra.

DRAMA

The drama department this year set sail on the sea of experiment and successfully completed its maiden voyage. The experiment was the unique arena stage. Completely flexible, this stage, built by Dave McFarlane and his crew under the supervision of Mr. Pimm, offers varied and interesting staging.

The Rivals, by Richard Sheridan, was first to be presented. Staged in the three-quarter round, it starred Hedy Wintrobe, Nola Moar, Les Tomlin, Bert Giffin, with others taking minor roles. Judy McFarlane, assisted by Sharon Mark, took over direction.

Patrick Hamilton's Angel Street, was presented next in the full round. This Victorian melodrama featured Orma Korella, Jerry Nagy, David Estrin, Sheila Wynn and Liane Kereliuk. Gail Hughes was director. Her assistant was Irene Mishukoff.

Staged in the novel alley stage, Tevya and His Daughters won wide acclaim. Bill Thorsell played Tevya, a Russian Jew at the turn of the century. His wife, Golde, was portrayed by Marilyn Pilkington. His daughters Tzeitl, Hodel and Chava were played by Nan McKee, Irene Mishukoff and Ann Young. The romantic leads were Bob Wilde and Don Allison. After the usual run, the cast was invited to perform once again for a Jewish audience on April 4. Mr. Pimm was responsible for direction and Judy McFarlane and Tony Penikett acted as assistants.

As the yearbook went to press the drama wing was buzzing with excitement as the puppet show began to take shape.

The success of this venture has been attributed to the patient guidance and instruction of Mr. Pimm, the hard working crews, the 1961-62 production staff, and the support of the theatre-going Strathcona population.

HOUSELEAGUES

GIRLS' BASKETBALL

As The Tricolor went to press, Houseleague Basketball was in the middle of its term. The present results are: Senior Gold leading with Green and Red tied for second and Blue following last. Gold is leading in the Junior teams. Thanks to all sponsors and students participating to make this effort a success.

GIRLS' BOWLING

For two days during the noon hour, grade tens, elevens, and twelves joined together to form competing teams from each house for Bowling. Teams were made up of five players and each house had an average of two teams. This sport proved to be interesting and fun for those participating. Results were: Gold House first, Green second.

VOLLEYBALL

The Volleyball season in the Houseleagues was very successful. Seniors, especially, turned out in full force. Senior finals were won by the Gold house, and Junior finals by the Blue house. Our thanks to the supervisors and students who took part in the successful season.

Further Houseleague events include Badminton, Swimming and Track and Field. These are highlighted by a Swim Meet and Novelty Track Meet.

A welcome is extended to Miss Silk on her return to Strathcona and sincere appreciation is expressed for her hard work and interest as adviser to the Athletic Council and Houseleague Adviser.

Basketball was the only Houseleague activity in which the boys participated this year. The winning houses were: Grade 12—Green "A", Grade 11—Blue "A", and Grade 10—Blue "A". Houseleague baseball may be organized.

SENIOR FOOTBALL

Front: Hart Cantelon, Ken Martin, Jeff Downey, John Fletcher, Brian MacDonald, Dave Gilbert, John Wilson, Al Bibaud, Wayne Chesney.

Scona's senior Lords, displaying a talented band of sophomores, some extremely agile backs and two solid lines, gave our school's rabid supporters plenty to cheer about. The Lords worked hard during practice on smoothing out the wrinkles that mussed up last year's performance. The result was an all-around improvement.

After a faltering start in which they dropped three out of four games, our Lords came on with a vengeance to finish with a highly respectable record of three wins and three losses.

Highlight of the season was a hard fought 14-7 triumph over the defending champions, St. Joseph's Saints. At schedule's end both offensive and defensive units gave every appearance of ranking with the best in the league.

Head coach Mr. Gilfillan and assistants Mr. Kadatz and Mr. Breitreutz are to be heartily commended for a fine coaching job.

JUNIOR FOOTBALL

Front: Dave Steel, Don Grimble, Bob Nichols, Ken Steele, Gord Haddow (Captain), Rick Young, Bill Buchta, Lorne Flach.

Middle: Ron Svarich, Don Fisher, Bob Campbell, Harry Hodgson (Co-Captain), Robert Burch, Neil Nichols, Allan Gossman, Colin Cross, Bob Reece.

JUNIOR FOOTBALL

A hard schedule and an average of young and inexperienced players took its toll of our junior Lords. Although talent was plentiful, the heavy schedule proved too great a burden, and no amount of innovation was able to stave off the losses.

The team finished the season with a record of one tie and five defeats, although the stout defensive squad held the opposition to only 51 points in six games.

High-spirited and eager, the juniors nevertheless needed time to learn the fundamentals. They were passive in September but much more formidable in October.

Thanks go to Bill Hyndman, Terry Nimmon, John Byrne, John Steel and Dennis Annesley, all former Strathcona students, who unselfishly devoted many hours to coaching our junior Lords.

SENIOR BOYS' BASKETBALL

Front: John Wilson, Jeff Downey, Rudy Kakoschke, Don Sheldon, Larry Sowa (Captain), Bill Jones.

Back: Mr. Kadatz, Dennis Helmers, Austen Davey, Lorne Garner (Manager), Brian Ritchie, Dave Sanders, Mr. Gilfillan.

SENIOR BOYS' BASKETBALL

Although battling all the way, Scona's senior basketball Lords just missed gaining a berth in the Edmonton high school playoffs. Excellent offensively, only nagging defensive weak spots kept this essentially strong team from ranking with the best.

The Lords were unbeatable at home, defeating all comers. But they met all the high school toughies away from home and lost all four road games. Their record of five wins and four losses left them in fifth place in the final standings.

High points of the season included a second place finish in the University of Saskatchewan invitational basketball tourney and a come-from-behind 42-40 victory over the Bonnie Doon Lancers in the season's final game.

Captained by Larry Sowa, the team's high scorer was Dennis Helmers. The boys were well coached by Mr. Gilfillan and Mr. Kadatz. Since coming to Scona, coach Gilfillan has never had a losing season. Despite some anxious moments, our Lords kept his record intact.

JUNIOR BOYS' BASKETBALL

Front: Harry Hodgson, Dave Steel, Jay Hirabayashi, Rodger Banister, Ken Purvis, Neil Bowker, Ron Cragg, Alex Hardy.
Back: Tony Hardy, Dave Haugen, Ed Molstad, Mr. Breitreutz, Bob Sutor, Dave Gilbert (Captain), Don Holmes.

Fast, gifted, and with no serious defensive needs, the 1962 edition of Scona's junior Lords experienced a successful season.

Winners of seven out of nine regular season games, the juniors were front and center in the title picture before being defeated in the league semi-finals. A well-balanced squad with three returnees, our Lords combined a varied attack with plenty of incentive. They had enough sharp-shooters to trade baskets with the best in the league, and over the season outscored the opposition by an average of seven points per game.

The team was captained by Dave Gilbert, while Ken Purvis was high scorer. Thanks go to Mr. Breitreutz for a coaching job well done.

SENIOR GIRLS' BASKETBALL

Front: Rose Parks, Gail Ozee, Barb Bell, Lynda Manning, Wendy Sinclair.
Back: Vicky Grisdale, Maureen Morgan, Miss Silk, Susan Bowen, Alice Sawchuk.
Missing: Aileen Connon, Christie Smith, Doris Erickson.

GIRLS' SPORTS

This season, as usual, was characterized by hard play and good sportsmanship. All four girls' teams put up good showings, but failed to place in the city league standings.

Miss Silk coached the Senior Basketball and Junior Volleyball teams, while Miss Holmgren coached the Senior Volleyball and Junior Basketball teams. Thanks go to these able teachers for their valuable help.

Back: Mary Jenkins, Joan Williams, Cathy Hutton, Miss Cal Holmgren, Kathy Kendal, Lorraine Beattie, Gail Haddad.
Missing: Janet Brown, Deitra Hager.

SENIOR BASKETBALL

Few of the girls from last year were on this year's team, consequently it took a while for the team to jell. The girls did show vast improvement and promise. We should very well have a team well in contention next year.

JUNIOR BASKETBALL

The girls showed adequate skill and spirit this year but did not place in league standings. Our Juniors will be looked to next year for a really good season.

SENIOR VOLLEYBALL

The Seniors had an encouraging season, the only thing standing between them and success was a number of unfortunate ties. The team showed good sportsmanship and lots of spirit; Scona was well represented by them.

JUNIOR VOLLEYBALL

Our Juniors did very well this year, reaching the semi-finals and only losing out by a small margin. The girls showed a lot of promise and bigger and better things are expected for them next year.

SENIOR GIRLS' VOLLEYBALL

Back: Marlene Coulter (Manager), Ann Murray, Vicky Grisdale, JoAnne Winship, Miss Cal Holmgren, Arlene Burden, Irene Ball, Carol Currie, Lynda Grant.

Missing: Denise Murray.

Front: Carole Warren, Corinne Thorsell, Diane Starr (Captain), Heather Martin, Faye Dunwoodie.

Back: Mary Jenkins, Kathy Kendal, Miss Silk, Maida Barnett, Liane Kereliuk.

Missing: Peggy Newton, Anna Harr, Janet McMahon.

Back: Jim Hockley, Michael Coleman, Robin Routledge, Doug Wilson, Gary Peterson, Charles Olson, Doug Sheppard, Bob Campbell, Jim Jenkinson.

SWIM TEAM

This was truly a wonderful year for Strathcona's Swim Team. Our aquatic whizzes swam away with every trophy offered at the public high schools' annual swim meet. The Jimmy Crockett Memorial trophy was taken in a joint effort by the boys and girls. The boys captured the T. D. Baker cup and the girls, not to be outdone, won the Dr. McKay Grand Aggregate trophy.

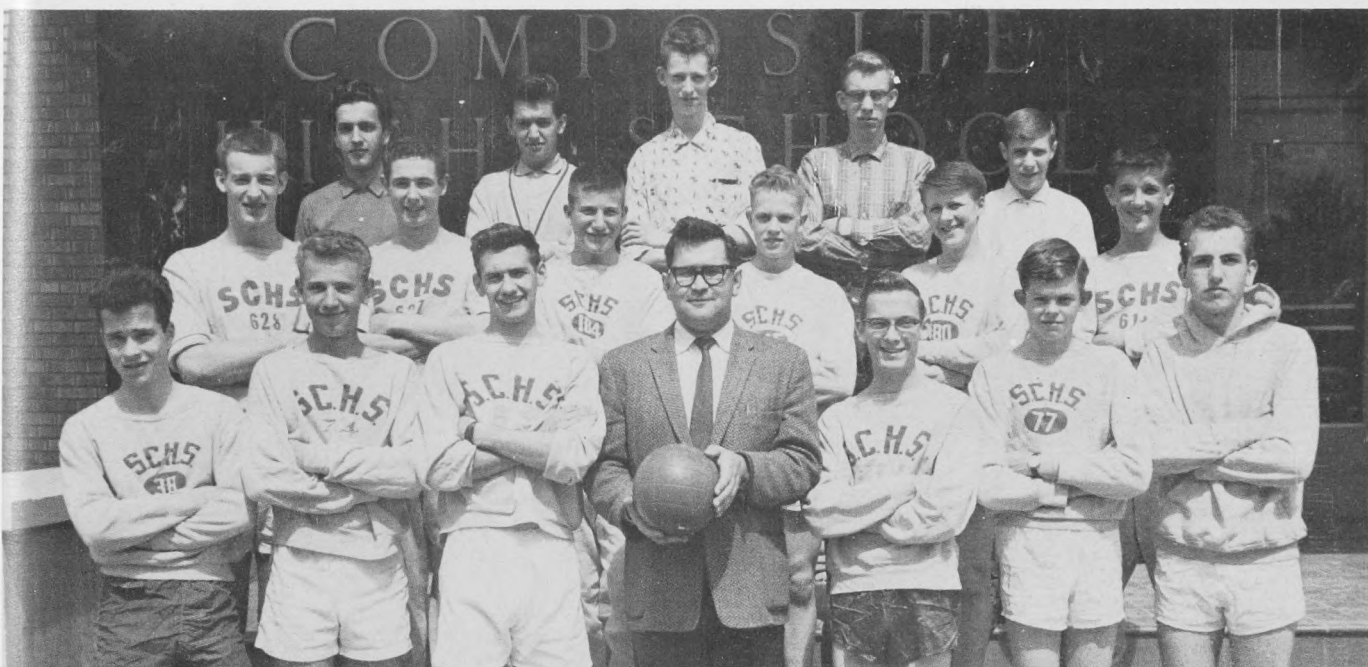

This wonderful display is due to the tremendous amount of work done by Mr. Wilson as coach and assistant coaches Bonnie McPherson and Brian Heffel. Our champion team deserves our congratulations and best wishes for continued success.

CONTESTS

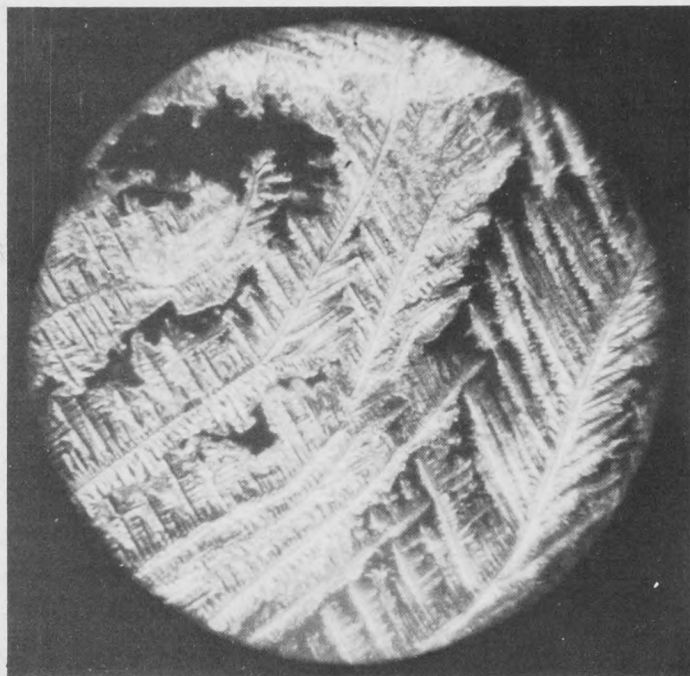

The response to the Yearbook Contests this year was extraordinarily good. Many entries were submitted in each of the fields of Art, Photography, Poetry, Essay and Short Story. Because, in previous years, we had great difficulty in reproducing the paintings which won First, Second and Third Prizes, we found it inadvisable to print them. The winners in this section were: First Prize Art, Neil Prinsen; Second Prize Art, Lance Love; and Third Prize Art, Joyce Lindberg.

We would like to thank Dr. Barrie for judging the Art work, Dr. Buxton for adjudicating the Poetry, Essay and Short Story entries; and Mr. Allen for his work with the Photography section.

ESSAY

FIRST PRIZE

Of Men, Mountains and Motives

by ROBERT MCGREGOR

Throughout history men who have climbed mountains have been asked by those who have not climbed, why they climb. The most famous of all replies is that of the late George Leigh Mallory: "Because they are there." But then, why do people play any other sport?

Because the essence of sport is the invention of an artificial problem for the fun of solving it. Nobody plays golf because need is satisfied, or some complex resolved by putting little white balls into holes; for if this were true people who were afflicted by this complex would go around a golf course at dawn dropping balls into the holes. Golf provides an artificial problem invented for the amusement of man, the problem of propelling a ball in the minimum number of strokes round an eighteen-hole golf course.

Many travellers have crossed mountain passes not because they liked mountaineering, but because they wanted to get to the other side. Nobody, however, has climbed a difficult peak for purely practical reasons. The ascent of a virgin peak is an artificial problem which offers to the solver no other reward than the fun of finding the correct solution.

The essence of mountaineering as a sport is the contest between the spirit of man and inanimate matter, and the key to all developments of mountaineering is the attempt to preserve the reality of this contest by weighing the odds against man. A virgin peak is a problem, but once the peak has been climbed new complications must be introduced in order that a contest, which would lose all interest if the outcome were certain, may be renewed with redoubled interest and zest. The conquest of new routes on peaks no longer virgin, guideless mountaineering, winter climbing, and ski mountaineering are all expressions of the same search for new problems. Artificial difficulties are invented in order that the game may continue, for a game in which victory is inevitable soon loses attraction.

Infinite is the interest which man throughout the ages has derived from exploiting the ingenious mechanism of his body and developing its hidden resources so as to establish some new record in one or the other of the many branches of athletic endeavor. The motive which makes one man strive to lower the world record for running a mile is much the same as that which compels a rock climber to attempt a virgin ridge.

There can be few sports which bring into play so many varieties of athletic talent as mountaineering, particularly if we include, as we should, ski-mountaineering. The balance of a rock climber is wholly different from the balance of a good skier. Many first class rock climbers have been indifferent skiers. Rock climbing again calls for qualities very different from those which are necessary for quick and accurate step-cutting in steep ice.

The characteristic common to all sports is the invention of problems for the fun of solving them. The characteristic common to all hard sports is asceticism and mountaineering is an ascetic sport. The word, ascetic, itself, is derived from the Greek word which means exercise, a noun which was used to describe the severe training of an athlete.

Saint Paul in a famous passage compares the asceticism of the athlete training for a perishable, and the asceticism of the saint training for the imperishable crown. The comparison was valid insofar as the one thing common to all forms of asceticism is the conviction that conquest of the flesh is the key to higher forms of happiness.

"Hell," said Mohammed, "is veiled with delights in hardships and miseries." There is no other sport which illustrates more perfectly than mountaineering the ascetic principle that "hardships and miseries" are the price which must be paid for the rewards which are, perhaps, a foretaste of what awaits us if we deserve and obtain beatitude.

But perhaps no man has summed up with such insight this ascetic key to mountaineering as John Ruskin. In a letter to his father from Chamonix (1863) he writes: "The question of the moral effect of danger is very curious one; but this I know and find, practically, that if you come to a dangerous place, and turn back from it, though it may have been right and perfectly wise to do so, still your character has suffered some slight deterioration; you are to that extent weaker, more lifeless, more effeminate, more liable to passion and error in the future; whereas if you go through with the danger though it may have been wrong and foolish to encounter it, you come out of the encounter a stronger man, fitter for every sort of work and trial, and nothing but danger produces this effect."

Fall Madness

by BARRY WILSON

Every autumn, about September 15th, a form of mass insanity sweeps the prairie provinces. Some call it sadism, others call it an exacting science, I call it hunting.

Several weeks before the season opens, hunting licences are procured, guns are oiled, and practice rounds are fired so as to be prepared to "bag your limit" on opening day. My old dog used to sense the hunting season coming, too. He loathed guns, although chasing wounded game was a passion with him, so the emotional turmoil that ran through his canine mind must have been dreadful.

Finally, the eve of the big day arrives. The station wagon is loaded down with artillery, ammunition, loads of food, and sundry other items so necessary to the true hunter. Alarm clocks are synchronized and set for 2:30 a.m. Lights out is at 9:30 insuring a good sleep.

Through previous hunting experience, I have gained a remarkable talent for shutting off my alarm clock in my sleep. Consequently, I am quite rudely robbed of my covers by my father and then heartlessly left to stagger to the washroom, wondering why I got myself mixed up in such madness.

Finally, having breakfasted on scrambled eggs and bacon, we are off. I am still in a semi-conscious state and dangle my head out the car window, hoping the fresh air will rouse me.

By the time we have reached the field, I have emerged from my torpid state sufficiently to help "pit in." Then, as the eastern sky slowly brightens, there is time to meditate on hunting seasons past.

I recall one day several years ago when old Brian, our dog whom I mentioned earlier, was alive. Dad and I were out shooting prairie chicken on the opening day of the "chicken" season. Brian hated guns with all his soul and therefore remained in the car when we left. We had gone but several yards when a prairie chicken flushed before us. We both fired but the bird was only winged. Brian was out of the car like a shot and galloped after the prairie chicken who was running away with all his might. Soon the pair was out of sight and we gave up the bird as lost. We waited about fifteen minutes. At the end of that time, Brian came pompously striding through the bush, proudly bearing a bird which, to our horror, turned out to be a perfectly healthy hen pheasant. Brian had evidently lost the prairie chicken, and spying the pheasant, decided that second best was better than nothing at all. As pheasant season was not open yet, and as hen pheasant was illegal game anyway, we promptly snatched the bird from Brian and turned it loose, praying that there were no game wardens watching. Brian, who was quite proud of his find, watched us in amazement as we let it go, and when he was punished for retrieving the wrong bird, stalked off to the car in a huff. He spent the rest of the day moodily regarding us as if we were a pair of nuts.

"Snap out of it, man, there's a flock coming in from the east, see it?" Crouching in his pit, the hunter becomes a caveman behind a rock waiting for his prey to draw near.

"Here they come, here they come." The sky is filled with the rustling of wings. "Now!" In unison the hunters stand up, silhouetted against the golden sunrise. For a moment guns roar, then all is still as a crumpled form strikes the stubble.

Some call it sadism, but they have never felt that primitive satisfaction as a duck, master of the air, collapses off the end of your sights. They have never seen mallards against the splendour of the sunrise, nor heard the cry of the wild goose, or the rustle of thousands of wings beating the darkened sky. Yes, hunting is a madness, but a madness I would not give up for the world.

The Hearty Handshake

by DORNA HUSTON

Shaking hands is a rather useless custom. It was introduced originally in ancient days when two people met and shook hands to indicate that they were not carrying weapons. However, handshaking is deeply ingrained in the social customs of our society, you therefore should be warned of the various social hazards that may be associated with this practice.

You will, of course, meet the ordinary, average, everyday type of handshake. Since it does no harm other than transmitting a few million bacteria I will say no more about it.

Another type is the soggy, limp, dishrag handshake which greatly resembles shaking hands with a piece of decaying cabbage. Often having experienced one of these you will feel that you should take your hand over and quietly bury it.

The extreme opposite of this is the bouncing athlete who feels he must exhibit his inhuman strength. If you feel your ears ringing and knuckles popping you can be sure you have just suffered the symptoms brought on by this type of handshake. Shaking hands with such an individual is like having your hand gently caressed by a Sherman tank.

Then, of course, there is the pumphandle shake. Your hand will be seized upon and jerked up and down with great vigor. Don't fight it! A friend of mine who resisted had his collarbone fractured.

There are various dilemmas in which you may find yourself in the practice of shaking hands. Only the other day while at a party I was standing contentedly in a corner with a hotdog in one hand and a milkshake in the other. A jovial fellow came up to me, introduced himself and stuck out his hand. Hurriedly stuffing the hotdog in my mouth I released a mustard paw. With my mouth full of hotdog I was unable to say anything so I beamed fondly at him. Unfortunately I bit through the hotdog which landed with a splash in my milkshake. As a word of advice, never stand with your hands full at a party as some donkey may offer you his hand.

On another occasion when I was introduced to a fellow I companionably offered him my hand. He did not offer his so I pulled mine back whereupon he stuck his out. Then went on for an embarrassing length of time until we both gave up and turned and fled. I once tried to solve this problem by presenting my hand and although feeling confident he would follow suit, he left it swinging merrily in the breeze. (He never saw it.)

After these brief illustrations I think you can agree with me that handshaking is a waste of time; it is hazardous, unnecessary and should be eliminated in the future.

My First Date and Dance

by DAVID PERSON

" . . . make our school's annual dance a success. Tickets are just one dollar each and they're selling fast at the ticket counter in the main rotunda! Thank you."

The way that boy said that announcement over the P.A. system at school last month started me thinking. I decided that I would like to go to the dance. I usually do things slowly and systematically, so first of all I went to the ticket counter to buy a ticket.

"Just one ticket?" the girl behind the counter asked me.

"Of course," I replied rather shortly, "I'm not a split personality."

I wondered, later, why she had asked me that in such a tone.

"She sounded half interested, and half puzzled," I thought. "Like I said, I didn't think I had a split—hey! I did mean to get two tickets." I guess I wasn't used to buying tickets for more than myself, that's all.

"Now, I suppose I'll have to face that same girl, when I go to buy another ticket," I thought. I had to. I wouldn't have blushed if she hadn't grinned at me as she did, or would I have?

As I said before, I usually do things systematically, but when it comes to getting a date, and dating, I wouldn't know what was systematically done, and what wasn't. However, I tried to do what I thought was right, and systematically done. I wrote down a list of forty-seven girls I knew, with my first preferences at the top. I planned to approach the first one and work down the list until one accepted my invitation. I didn't have to go to the end of the list, for the ninth girl accepted my invitation.

The night of the dance came. I guess I was nervous and excited, for I forgot to take my socks off before I got into the bathtub.

I had so many warnings and so much advice on dating manners, etc. that I forgot who said what. My grandmother, my aunt, a neighbour lady, and both my parents were among these advice- and warning-givers. I remember my mother and my grandmother both dabbing at their eyes as I went out the front door. I actually enjoyed the quiet outside, after being in such confusion and noise.

I was almost mad at Mom and Dad for not letting me phone Arlene to ask her if she could meet me at my house, and we would go to the dance from there. (My house is half-way between her house and our school). It was eighteen degrees below zero with a cold wind blowing.

"This way," I griped to myself as I trudged towards Arlene's house, "I'll have to go all the way to her house, and back to the school, via the road past my house."

However, we finally arrived at the school.

I enjoyed the dance, but Arlene didn't say whether she did or she didn't. I know my dancing was very far from being good because the night before the dance I had tried to limber up my legs and feet, for dancing, in my bedroom by doing some of the different dancing steps. I had tripped myself twice, and I had to polish my shoes afterwards, because my shoes were so badly scuffed up.

During the course of the dance, Arlene complained to me that her feet had suddenly become swollen.

"Maybe you froze them on the way to the dance," I offered sympathetically.

"Maybe," she said dully.

She asked me if I would please come and sit down, and talk instead of dancing. Not being experienced in the art of conversing with girls, I was plagued with failure, at first. Arlene didn't seem to know much about cars, hockey, or football; so I tried to think of another topic. After we discussed the weather four times, I ventured into another subject. She must have had some interest in nuclear reaction and radioactivity, because my lecture seemed to set her to thinking very deeply—about the subject, I presumed. She even agreed with me on the opinion I had taken, because when I asked her what her opinion was, she looked at me slowly and said,

"Anything you say."

Because she seemed to agree with me, I continued my discussion of the subject until I had almost exhausted every aspect of it.

"Don't you think that our curfew is rapidly approaching?" she asked me suddenly, but politely.

I looked at my watch and realized that it was.

"Boy, time sure flies when you get engrossed in an interesting subject," I said to her.

"Yes, it sure does, doesn't it?" she replied rather dully.

Mein Liebes Muetterlein *

by BERND STEINRATHS

There is one thing which I remember most vividly about my mother, and I hope that I will never forget it. I was about four years old at the time.

"Look at the glittering birds," shouted little Johann. We had been playing outside all morning. When my older brother Fritz and I looked up, we saw five squadrons of bombers, which were unloading their deadly cargo.

Fritz grabbed both of us and hurried us into the house. He called for mother to come quickly down to the basement. We could already hear some explosions as we rushed down the stairs.

Mother complimented Fritz on his quick acting. Then it happened. One loud detonation—smoke, dust, and the ceiling came down on us. Everything happened so fast that I do not remember it clearly; but I remember distinctly how mother grabbed us, pushed us over to the chimney-corner and covered us as a hen protects her little chicks.

The next thing I remember is little Johann crying. I was afraid, too, because of the darkness, that surrounded us. But mother had a flashlight; the light and her presence gave us courage.

A miracle had happened. We were all unhurt except for some small cuts and minor bruises. Above us two floor beams had formed a small cave, just big enough for all four of us.

As in all previous bombardments, mother had a little box for use in emergency. She now produced from it a whole loaf of bread and a bottle of water. She also treated our ailments. When I think back now, I know that it was mother alone who helped us to get over those terrible hours. When we were hungry, she fed us. When we were frightened, she sang with us. When we became restless, she told us stories. I do not remember mother showing any signs of agitation, at least not until Johann asked; "Why do they always have to bomb us?"

Mother did not answer right away, and I could see the expression on her face when she said; "I suppose they always bomb us because we bombed them first!"

"But why did we bomb them first?"

"I'm afraid that I do not really know."

"I bet Daddy knows," replied little Johann.

"No, father didn't know either."

"Why isn't Daddy here now?"

This time Fritz answered rather harshly, "You know that father is far away. How many times do we have to tell you?"

Our light began to weaken noticeably, and we children started to wonder if an emergency crew would ever arrive. Our water supply had diminished quickly. It seemed to us that we had been buried for days.

Keeping this in mind, I think you may have some idea of our feeling of jubilation when we finally noticed the rescue crew by the hammering above us. Our jumping and yelling, as far as it was possible, attracted the attention of the rescuers, who doubled their efforts. Mother tried to calm us down because now a new peril entered the picture—debris and stones were shaken loose and hit the floor all around us. We huddled into the corner and waited impatiently for the moment when we could leave our confinement.

We did not have to wait long, and we saw the face of a worker through the beams above. The man took one look and warned us not to move. By now large pieces of lumber and bricks rained down on us. Fritz's hand was smashed, and my leg was pinned to the floor.

Then came the moment, which I know I shall never forget. Mother freed my leg, took a piece of lumber, pried the two beams apart, and told us to scurry through the opening.

Right after the men had lifted us out, I heard the whole remaining structure collapse.

We just stood there and looked down on the remaining rubble that was once our home. Little Johann repeated over and over again; "Why doesn't Mommy come out?"

The Butterfly Net

by MARGARET PATCHING

"Oh, you should have seen him! He spoke better than all the others, his replies came faster, and he was by far the most confident. And cute. He's got the nicest accent, too." I rhapsodized about the latest memorable male I had seen.

"Did you get introduced to him, Diana?" My sister had stooped to speak to me, but her tone revealed the depth to which she felt she had stooped.

"No. But I met one of the girls who's in the same speaking club and she was telling me a bit about—well, not him exactly, but about their club."

"Why didn't you go up and speak to him?" She didn't quite come right out and say, "Okay, Stupid, you've flubbed it."

"I didn't have the nerve," I admitted. "But their school's going to have a mock General Assembly, and he's sure to be the general or something. And he's going to be in their year play. I'm going to both if I can manage."

"What play, Di?"

"Gee, I forget. The girl did tell me. Last year they did 'Our Town' and this year he's going to be in it." My sister didn't see the connection, but she knew that it wouldn't do to get me more confused by asking. "He's sure to go places. He's a born leader."

"Well, why don't you catch him? Go places with him—away from here, I hope."

"Maybe I just will." And that marked my resolution to catch John Black. Not only had I decided to catch him, but I had decided to let him think that he had done the catching. I hadn't had much practice at that sort of thing, but surely if I took the scientific approach, I couldn't go wrong.

Milestones stand a mile apart, and how far that first mile stretched! I narrowed my attention to two problems: how to meet him and how to attract him. I couldn't run into John Black in the halls, because he didn't go to my school. Going to his year play and then asking for his autograph would make me only one of his all-too-many worshippers. I couldn't join any of the same clubs as he, because I had no idea of which organizations he belonged to. But I did know that he was interested in politics. That was a start.

A week from the first milestone I had progressed exactly two feet backwards. I knew that there was no political party in Canada with a group for teenagers. I knew that John Black had never had his name or picture in the newspaper for five years. I had looked.

And then my luck changed almost magically. I had gone to a party and there on the floor sat a boy, eating popcorn.

"Who's he?" I asked my hostess.

"That's Eddy Colbert. He goes to Martimer School. Come on over and I'll introduce you."

"Hi," I said.

"Mmmph," he replied cheerfully. He swept a space on the floor clear with his coat sleeve, and as his mouth grew emptier, he offered me a seat. "Here," I thought as I accepted, "is my free ticket to their year play and assembly." Before long I had heard the life story of Eddy Colbert, his interests, and quite a bit about a boy who lived only half a block away, John Black. See, I told you it was magic.

A week later Eddy and I were sitting in a cafe eating hamburgers. We had been dancing that night, and bowling the night before, and to a hockey game before that. Like a fish, Eddy was hooked and I had only to reel him in.

"Eddy, you know I'm getting quite curious about this John Black. I've heard so much about him and I'd like a chance to meet your friends."

"Gee, I don't know. He was okay a few years ago, but he's kind of stuck up now. I don't think you'd like him." Oh, wouldn't I?

"But Eddy. He was your friend. Please."

Sunday afternoon, Eddy and I met John Black for coffee. Problem one was gone.

"I saw you debate against our school a couple of weeks ago. You were pretty good." I said.

"Of course I was." John assured me. "But you should see me at my best. Once I—" and there went problem two. All I had to do was listen, all I could do was listen. Neither Eddy or I got a word in for the next two hours. Success was mine for when Eddy went to pay the check, John asked me to go to a party with him the next Saturday.

For the next few weeks I didn't get a chance to see Eddy again and I missed him a bit even though John took me to lots of functions. Then one morning the telephone rang.

"Dia-a-a-na. It's fer you." My little brother had answered it. "It's yer bo-o-o-oy friend."

I grabbed at the receiver, scowled at him, and sweetly said "Hello?"

"Diana." It was Eddy and he sounded mad. "I've got something to say to you and you're going to hear it. I'll pick you up in ten minutes."

"But—"

"Click" went the phone.

How could he hang up on me like that. Well, I had something to say to him, too.

When Eddy arrived I was waiting at the door. Neither of us said a word. He drove to a hill where we could see the city spread out beneath us. Eddy took a deep breath and turned to me.

"I've been asking about you. Last Saturday you went to hear John recite poetry in a coffee house." His tone accused me of having enjoyed that beastly, boring evening.

"What's wrong with that?"

"The Saturday before you went to a Liberal Convention where John stood and made a resolution."

"That's more than you could do."

"Before that you went to a party where everybody talked politics. You didn't say one intelligent thing."

"John said he had better do the talking because he knew about it."

"Oh, Diana," he said, half sadly, half angrily. "You're a butterfly. You should be fluttering in the sun, not huddled in a coffee house watching John make speeches. Look at yourself. Did you really like watching old men talk about election campaigns? Do you want to be watching an egotistical brat for the rest of your life? Does John ever think of you or are you only his audience? He doesn't know you. But I do." His voice pleaded, "Diana, don't try to grow old so fast. Wait for me."

I must have been crying, because Eddy pulled out his big red handkerchief and offered it to me.

"Oh, Eddy," I sobbed. "I've been a fool. And you've been so sweet. Can you ever forgive me?"

"On one condition," he grinned. "Just remember that butterflies shouldn't be hunters, even if they are named Diana."

MY FIRST DATE AND DANCE

We got our coats and rubbers on and prepared to leave.

"Are we going to have to walk home again?" she asked me, as I started towards the doors.

"Yes, I guess so," I answered, "the wind isn't as strong as when we came here, and it's not that very far to my house."

"Your house?!" she exclaimed.

"Sure, you know where my house is, don't you?" I replied.

"Why, yes, but . . ."

"O.K., let's go," I said, "we'll have to hurry."

She never said anything on the way home. I guess she was still thinking about that interesting discussion on nuclear reaction and radioactivity. It must have really carried her away in mind, for she even forgot to say good-bye to me, even though I said it to her. She was still walking with her head down, in thought, as I walked up the front steps of my house.

I have been puzzled ever since, that she hasn't accepted any of my invitations to go anywhere. The only conclusion I can make is that females are unpredictable.

POETRY

THIRD PRIZE

Dust

by BRENDA GOLBERG

Worn old volumes

There you lie
Abandoned.

Thrust to the side

By someone grown careless of a care,
Someone who no longer remembers
Your cozy friendship

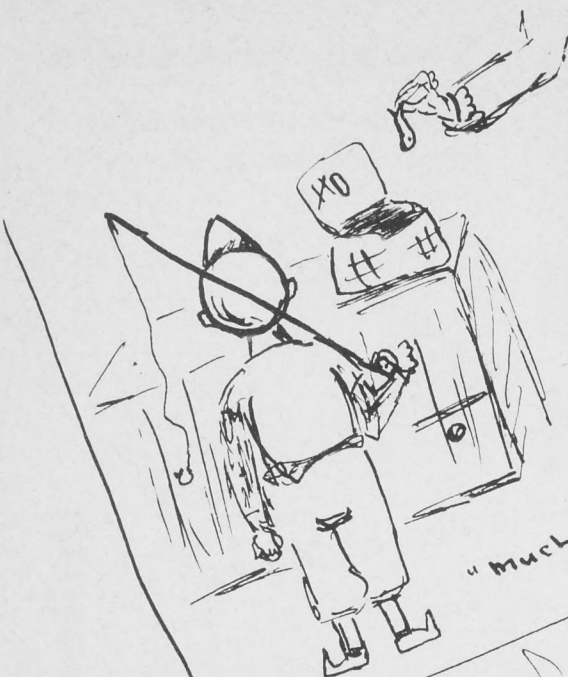

Of rainy days,

Your welcome comfort
For bitter wounds.

Alone you lie
In Sadness.

But also Pride . . .

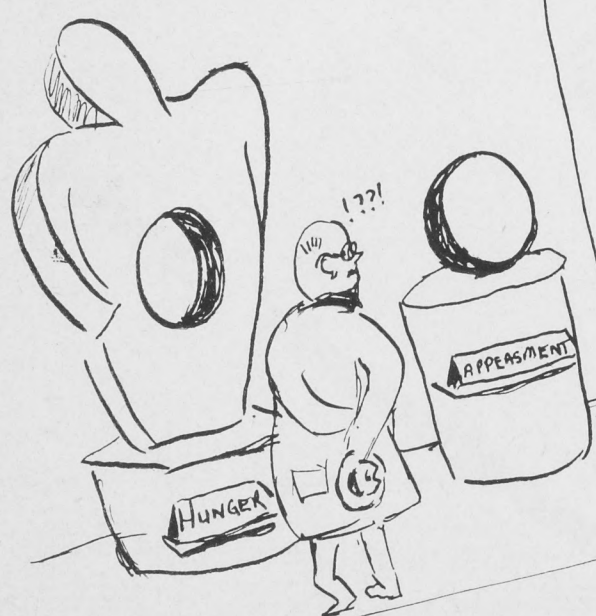

Pride of duty well served.

"much of a struggle?"

"you'll write, of course."

If I told you once, I told you a thousand times, keep the lid on that grasshopper!

IN APPRECIATION

We would like to thank all those who have made this Tricolor possible:

The United Nations and Miss Soper who made the pictures for our dedication page available;

Mr. Smith, our sponsor, who always took time to help us with our problems and give us assistance with the work;

The secretaries, Mrs. Barr, Mrs. Crozier, Mrs. Svarich and Mrs. Campbell, who were always ready to assist;

Mr. Miller, our caretaker, who undertook so readily to help with our pictures;

The members of the staff who worked tirelessly with us.

Without the help of these people and the entire Tricolor executive and staff, the 1961-62 Tricolor would not have been published.

A sincere "thank you" to each one.
